

I'm very trilled with the idea that pharmacists in Ontario would hopefully have a broader scope of practice soon. We are already used to being liable for our work and I don't see why we should feel differently when it comes to prescribing. I hope that legislation will provide clear guidelines regarding that subject and what additional training might be necessary. I think that pharmacists who have adequate knowledge in certain field and feel comfortable about prescribing should be given that opportunity. My specialty is DM and I would love to be able to have more influence on a patient's treatment. There were times I had a patient who needed serious assessment and initiation of therapy ASAP but for to me unknown reason was not getting it. Giving knowledgeable and motivated pharmacists chance to prescribe would definitely take some burden from crowed Dr's offices and save government money from disease complications BP